

Abstract

A method to deliver spark during a start for an internal combustion engine is described. The method provides individual cylinder spark angle control based on the number of 5 fueled cylinder events. The method offers improved engine emissions while maintaining engine speed run-up performance.

---